How does poverty/world hunger affect your lifestyle and the people around you?

57 responses

It doesn't

It affects us in broad sense of life, for instance the way we look at food at time maybe different if everyone was on the same playing field in that regard.

It affects the students I work with. Food insecurity is a contributing factor to student depression and mental health issues.

It affects the people around me by allowing many of my family members to procrastinate on choices they could possibly make to better a cause like this where i am from, majority of the country still lives in poverty and is very under developed

It helped feed the people in my city and took very little of my own time.

Im all aspects of life
